Rifle

Tools Every Rifle Shooter Should Own.

One of my loyal readers asked for an article about basic tools that every rifleman should own. This article is the result.

The first thing you should own is a decent cleaning rod/kit. This means a one-piece rod that is sized both in length and diameter to fit your rifle. Multi-section rods are to be avoided especially the ones that come in the so called "universal" gun cleaning kits. You also need a good cleaning jag. I prefer the pointed jags. I think, in cleaning, they tend to remove the crud better than the brass loops. A side benefit is that jags use smaller patches and thus less cleaning solution. For deep cleaning, brass brushes are a necessity. But consider brushes as an expendable item as they will wear out with use. A brush to clean the chamber is also useful. Wrapping patches around said brush with cleaning solution is all you will probably need for chamber cleaning. Finally, a gun cradle of some sort is a necessity for both cleaning and gunsmithing. The cradle holds the gun steady in a convenient position for cleaning and working on. Get one. Note, always clean the gun from the chamber end if possible. If you have to clean from the muzzle, be careful not to damage the barrel crown (end of the barrel).

For basic gunsmithing, here are some of the tools I think are essential:

Gunsmithing screwdrivers. No one likes to see gun screws that were mauled by standard screwdrivers. Gunsmithing screwdrivers are ground to fit gun screws exactly. You can get them as a set of drivers or as a set with a handle and different driver bits. It's your choice but make sure the set also covers Phillips and Torx drivers as well. While on the subject, a torque screwdriver is a very handy tool for setting the barreled action in the stock and tightening scope bases and rings.

Punches. Get a set in both brass and steel. The steel set is for driving pins and the like. The brass set does the same things but won't mar anything. To use the punches, a small hammer is quite useful. It should have one face that is brass and another plastic.

Needle nose pliers. These are for holding small screws or friction pins and the like. Don't skimp on quality here. A cheap pair is sometimes worse that no pliers at all. Likewise, a decent pair of tweezers is useful too. DON"T use the pair from your wife's makeup kit. They're crap. Unless, they are the more expensive Tweezerman brand, and more importantly ask before you borrow them! Or get a good pair from the hobby store. Continued on page 4.

Did you Know

The Oxford property was purchased in 1946, for the sum for $20,000. This was made up of 150 acres, including a 30 acre lake and a small log cabin. It was bought two years prior to buying the property on Dequindre, where we now have our clubhouse, business office and other sporting activities.

The current rifle range opened in the spring of 1987. Lead by BOD member John Brown. The range was uncovered and was basically a field to start with an old travel trailer as the "range building". Now you know why the road to the range is called John Brown.

Rifle cont.

Allen Wrenches. Allen screws are very common on guns nowadays. Get a complete set in both customary and metric values.

Flashlight. It never fails that you need to make an adjustment on your gun but the ambient light sucks. A flashlight will help.

Magnifier. A simple magnifying glass can help you make those scope adjustments you need and help prevent you from turning the adjustment drum the wrong direction.

Regular pliers and an adjustable wrench. You probably already have these tools but be sure to keep them handy for simple tasks.

Odds and Ends. A good pocket knife, a brass cleaning brush on a handle, gun oil and cleaning patches are all useful as well. That's' my list. I'm sure that I have probably missed a few things, but this list should a least give you a place to start.

This commemorative shoot for the end of the war is for WWII military rifles. They can be from any nation, but they have to have been used in WWII. Therefore, M1As, ARs, SKS, AKs and they like are not allowed. You may still shoot one for fun, but will not factor into the final results.

Course of fire: 20 shots prone at 100 yards and 20 shots standing at 200 yards, slow fire.

Carbines and like shoot 20 shots prone at 50 yards and 20 shots standing at 100 yards, slow fire.

There will be a 10 minute unlimited shot, sighting period prior to the match start at competitor's choice of distance. Sight adjustments are not allowed between stages. Service rifle equipment allowed.

Targets: SR target at 200 yards and the SR-1 target at 100 and 50 yards.

Fees: $20 for the first gun and $10 each for any additional guns.

This is Match #2 of a two part series. The first part is the German surrender shoot May 4, 2025. You do not have to shoot both parts. Each match is a separate match. Both matches will be combined to find an overall champion.
